Description of sources / search method

This file contains information regarding the sources referenced to determine whether ethnic groups traditionally pray for rain. We looked for all the ethnic groups in the augmented Ethnographic Atlas of Giuliano and Nunn (2021). We searched in Google Scholar for the top 10 references on a search on the name of the ethnic group and the keywords “rain ritual” and “praying for rain.” This file contains the name of each ethnic group, references for the articles on that group (with urls to access content online) and a specific source citation for each group found to practice a rain ritual.

“Citations for rain ritual” sheet for groups that are found to practice a rain ritual

The first sheet after README, named “Citations for rain ritual”, contains the citations to sources documenting the rain ritual among the ethnic groups we found that do practice a rain ritual. The column fields are:

- Name in EA: This variable describes the name of the ethnic group, as it appears in the Ethnographic Atlas
- Name in source: This variable describes the name of the ethnic group, as it appears in the anthropological literature surveyed
- Religion: This variable describe the type of religion practiced by each ethnic group: Buddhist, Catholic, Christian, Hindu, Islamic, Jewish, Norse, Shamanism, Trituals, or Other religious ceremonies. Notice that some groups may practice more than one type.
- Period: Some of the anthropological sources list the period for which the relevant information applies. For example, the information regarding the Maori, applies from 1320/1350 until today.
- Location: This variable lists the modern country, or countries, where the ethnic group was located.
- Source: This variable lists a reference, and page number, in the antropological literature that mentions a given ethnic group practicing a rain ritual.
- Comment: This variable contains miscellaneous information for some ethnic groups. This information is useful to understand how we constructed our dataset. For example, on row 55, we can see that an ethnic group appears in the Ethnographic Atlas as “Abor” but we match it with an ethnic group in the anthropological literature as “Adi.” This variable shows the reference for an article (Nyori, T. (2013). Origin of the name ‘Abor’/‘Adi’.) that explains that both names refer to the same ethnic group.

References for all groups regardless of whether they are found to practice a rain ritual

All of the sheets from "African-Middle Eastern" onward contain the sources we referenced for groups in one geographic area: African-Middle Eastern, North American, South American, North Eurasian, East Eurasian, and Other. These sources cover all groups whether or not they were found to practice a rain ritual.

On each sheet, the first column displays the name of the ethnic group. The following columns display the reference and the url, i.e., the second column displays the first reference and the third column displays its corresponding url, and so on. The reader can scroll down until row 7, to find the Aymara group. From the second to the twenty-first columns, the reader can see 10 academic references and their corresponding 10 urls. They are ordered in relevance order, according to google scholar.

Brief guide to locating sources for one group.

To locate a particular ethnic group, one should go to the sheet referring to the proper region. For example, if one is looking for the Aymara, one should go to the "South American" sheet. Once there, on the first column, ethnic groups are ordered alphabetically. Each of the column articles concerns the Aymara people.
